Catholic Institutions with Employee Unions

“Among the basic rights of the human person is to be numbered the right of freely founding unions for working people.”

— Gaudium et Spes, 1965

Among the basic rights of the human person is to be numbered the right of freely founding unions for working people. These should be able truly to represent them and to contribute to the organizing of economic life in the right way. Included is the right of freely taking part in the activity of these unions without risk of reprisal.

— GAUDIUM ET SPES, PASTORAL CONSTITUTION ON THE CHURCH AND THE MODERN WORLD (1965)

On the parish and diocesan level, through its agencies and institutions, the Church employs many people; it has investments; it has extensive properties for worship and mission. All the moral principles that govern the just operation of any economic endeavor apply to the Church and its agencies and institutions; indeed, the Church should be exemplary

— US CATHOLIC BISHOPS, ECONOMIC JUSTICE FOR ALL: PASTORAL LETTER ON CATHOLIC SOCIAL TEACHING AND THE U.S. ECONOMY (1986)

Catholic social teaching endorses the right of workers to form labor unions and calls upon labor and management to establish cooperative relationships to advance their craft and the common good. When Catholic institutions and trade unions establish mutually rewarding partnerships, they teach in deed as well as in word.

The CLN is pleased to report that there are more than 600 Catholic institutions in the United States modeling Catholic social teaching through collaborative, mutually rewarding relations of collective bargaining with their direct and indirect (contract) employees.

Catholic Healthcare

More than half the employees who enjoy union representation are employed in Catholic hospitals and nursing homes. The Catholic Health Association reports that there are more than 600 Catholic hospitals and nearly 1600 nursing homes. The hospitals alone employ more than 500,000 full-time employees and another 200,000 part-time workers.

Tens of thousands of nurses, certified nursing assistants, technical staff, and other employees of Catholic hospitals and nursing homes belong to unions. These workers have the right to organize in unions under the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA). When a majority choose a union to represent them, by voting or by signing authorization cards, the union is empowered to represent them in collective bargaining with the employer. The Service Employees International Union (SEIU), National Nurses United (NNU), the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) and the American Federation of Teachers (AFT) each represent large numbers of Catholic health care employees; a dozen or more other unions represent such employees in particular parts of the United States.

Catholic hospitals are not usually operated by a Bishop or a Diocese. Most Catholic hospitals were established and staffed by religious orders of priests, friars or nuns, but today are managed and staffed by lay employees of many faiths. A Catholic hospital is required to adhere to the Ethical and Religious Directives (ERDs) for Catholic Health Care Services promulgated by the US Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB). If a Bishop finds that a Catholic hospital is in violation of the ERDs he can revoke its Catholic status. Many of the 72 ERDs cover pastoral care of patients or services, such as abortion, which are forbidden. However, the seventh directive specifically enjoins Catholic hospitals to treat workers with justice and recognize their right to form a union and bargain collectively:

7. A Catholic health care institution must treat its employees respectfully and justly. This responsibility includes: equal employment opportunities for anyone qualified for the task, irrespective of a person's race, sex, age, national origin, or disability; a workplace that promotes employee participation; a work environment that ensures employee safety and well-being; just compensation and benefits; and recognition of the rights of employees to organize and bargain collectively without prejudice to the common good.

In 2009, after a long process of dialogue and discernment, the US Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Catholic Health Association, and several labor organizations produced an important document on the topic. Respecting the Just Rights of Workers: Guidance and Options for Catholic Health Care and Unions can be found on the USCCB website.

There are nearly 300 Catholic hospitals and health care institutions in the United States whose employees enjoy the benefits of union representation. In some, different unions represent different categories of employees. Is your union or hospital missing from the list? Email Clayton Sinyai with details and help us keep the list current and complete!

Catholic K-12 Education

According to the National Catholic Educational Association, in the 2012-22 school year 146,088 full time teachers and support staff instruct more than 1.6 million children in our nation's nearly 5,938 Catholic schools. Before the 1960s most teaching positions were filled by vowed religious (nuns, friars, and priests who belonged to religious orders). Today lay men and women account for more than 97% of the Catholic school workforce.

Unlike most Catholic hospitals and universities, Catholic schools are typically operated directly by the Church. Elementary and Middle schools are generally operated by parishes, while high schools are more commonly operated by a diocese or sponsoring religious order. Because they are directly operated by the Church and charged with teaching religious doctrine to Catholic youth, the courts have exempted these schools from the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Act, citing the First Amendment's absolute protections of religious freedom.

This exemption does NOT mean that teachers lack the right to form unions and bargain collectively, just that the National Labor Relations Board will not protect them from those that might violate their rights. The NLRB's absence does not absolve the pastor, school board or principal from the Bishops' injunction that "All the moral principles that govern the just operation of any economic endeavor apply to the Church and its agencies and institutions; indeed the Church should be exemplary (Economic Justice for All, 1986)."

Indeed, in approximately 300 K-12 Catholic Schools across the across the United States, teachers have formed unions and established mutually rewarding collective bargaining relationships with individual Catholic schools or entire Diocesan school systems. Some belong to familiar unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO, while many others belong to an independent union, the National Association of Catholic School Teachers.

Catholic Higher Education

According to the Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities, America is home to approximately 260 Catholic institutions of higher education serving more than 850,000 students. Most were established and largely staffed by religious orders and served primarily Catholic students. Today's Catholic universities, however, employ faculty and staff — and enroll students — of all faith backgrounds.

Catholic social teaching defends the right of all workers to form unions and bargain collectively, but different categories of university employees have different legal status under American labor law. Some categories of employees, such as custodians, cafeteria workers and many clerical employees — enjoy all the protections of the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA). Tenured faculty, on the other hand, are considered management employees; although they can and sometimes do form unions, the Labor Board will not protect them from retaliation if they do so.

In recent years adjunct faculty in colleges across the United States — who have been assigned increasing amounts of the college teaching load — have sought to organize in unions. While a handful have resisted unionization — and even cited their Catholic identity as a reason! — a growing number of Catholic colleges have recognized unions of adjunct instructors.

In addition to bargaining directly with unions of their employees, a number of Catholic universities have taken important steps to vindicate the rights of workers employed by their contractors and suppliers. Some have adopted contracting policies that insist firms providing janitorial or food services pay workers a living wage and honor their workers' right to organize. Others have adopted fair labor codes for suppliers of college-branded garments and gear. In many cases universities have been aided in their discernment on these matters by vigorous student action.

*On the following page find a list of Catholic Colleges and Universities whose direct or indirect (contract) employees have union representation. (Schools marked with an asterisk* have unions representing some categories of workers but are fighting the efforts of adjunct instructors to exercise this right.)*

Among the basic rights of the human person is to be numbered the right of freely founding unions for working people. These should be able truly to represent them and to contribute to the organizing of economic life in the right way. Included is the right of freely taking part in the activity of these unions without risk of reprisal.
